Assessments should be made on a remittance system similar to monthly payroll assessments for CRA. There would be no guessing what payroll costs will be for the upcoming year, no overpaying if you guess high, no penalty if you guess low. For seasonal employers there would not be a large first payment in the spring before you have started working. Employers are already doing remittances for payroll so the amounts are already calculated. A year end reconciliation would need to be done based on actual payroll. I have worked in other provinces that base their remittances on actual payroll with monthly remittances and found it far easier to work with.

Thank you for your consideration.
